Nehemiah 8

Ezra came up out of Babylon thirteen years before Nehemiah came, yet we have here a piece of good work which he did, that might have been done before, but was not done till Nehemiah came, who, though he was not such a scholar nor such a divine as Ezra, nor such a scribe in the law of his God, yet was a man of a more lively active spirit. His zeal set Ezra's learning on work, and then great things were done, as we find here, where we have, I. The public and solemn reading and expounding of the law, Nehemiah 8:1-8. II. The joy which the people were ordered to express upon that occasion, Nehemiah

8:9-12. III. The solemn keeping of the feast of tabernacles according to the law, Nehemiah 8:13-18.

Nehemiah 9

The tenth day of the seventh month between the feast of trumpets (Nehemiah 8:2; Nehemiah 8:2) and the feast of tabernacles (Nehemiah 9:14) was appointed to be the day of atonement; we have no reason to think but that it was religiously observed, though it is not mentioned. But here we have an account of an occasional fast that was kept a fortnight after that, with reference to the present posture of their affairs, and it was, as that, a day of humiliation. There is a time to weep as well as a time to laugh. We have here an account. I. How this fast was observed, Nehemiah 9:1-3. II. What were the heads of the prayer that was made to God on that occasion, wherein they made a thankful acknowledgment of God's mercies, a penitent confession of sin, and a humble submission to the righteous hand of God in the judgments that were brought upon them, concluding with a solemn resolution of new obedience, Nehemiah 9:4-38.

Nehemiah 10

We have in this chapter a particular account of the covenant which in the close of the foregoing chapter was resolved upon; they struck while the iron was not, and immediately put that good resolve in execution, when they were in a good frame, lest, if it should be delayed, it might be dropped. Here we have, I. The names of those that set their hands and seals to it, Nehemiah 10:1-27. II. An account of those who signified their consent and concurrence, Nehemiah 10:28; Nehemiah 10:29. III. The covenant itself, and the articles of it in general, that they would "keep God's commandments" (Nehemiah 10:29); in particular, that they would not marry with the heathen (Nehemiah 10:30), nor profane the sabbath, nor be rigorous with their debtors (Nehemiah 10:31), and that they would carefully pay their church-dues, for the maintenance of the temple service, which they promise faithfully to adhere to, Nehemiah 10:32-39.

Nehemiah 11

Jerusalem was walled round, but it was not as yet fully inhabited, and therefore was weak and despicable. Nehemiah's next care is to bring people into it; of that we have here an account. I. The methods taken to replenish it, Nehemiah 11:1; Nehemiah 11:2. II. The principal persons that resided there, of Judah and Benjamin (Nehemiah 11:3-9), of the priests and Levites, Nehemiah 11:10-19. III. The several cities and villages of Judah and Benjamin that were peopled by the rest of their families, Nehemiah 11:20-36

Nehemiah 12

In this chapter are preserved upon record, I. The names of the chief of the priests and the Levites that came up with Zerubbabel, Nehemiah 12:1-9. II. The succession of the high priests, Nehemiah 12:10; Nehemiah 12:11. III. The names of the next generation of the other chief priests, Nehemiah 12:12-21. IV. The eminent Levites that were in Nehemiah's time, Nehemiah 12:22-26. V. The solemnity of dedicating the wall of Jerusalem, Nehemiah 12:27-43. VI. The settling of the offices of the priests and Levites in the temple, Nehemiah 12:44-47.
